

Andrés Conthe is an Spanish medical doctor currently in his third year of residency in Gastroenterology and Hepatology at the Gregorio Marañón Hospital in Madrid. He was born in Madrid (07 December 1991) starting his medical studies at the age of 17 in the Autónoma University of Madrid. For his fifth year of university he obtained an Erasmus grant being able to study in the Strasbourg Medical University (France). Thanks to this experience, he speaks fluent French and fluent English.

During his first three years as a medical doctor, he has learned the importance of having both perspectives in medicine: clinical and research. Thanks' to Dr. Bañares's and Dr. Vaquero's team, he has been able to see the perseverance and hard work needed to success in this field. Oral communications in national and international congresses, a JAMA letter to the editor and a manuscript in process of acceptance have been his main achievements during these last years, as well as and a poster in the latest ILC.

Apart from the professional profile, he spends his spare time going out with his colleagues and with his football teammates. He is a big supporter of Real Madrid football club as well as a Rafa Nadal (Spanish tennis player) fan. He loves travelling around Europe getting to know new people.
